

Guanacaste National Park

BELIZE AUDUBON SOCIETY

BAS is the longest standing conservation NGO in Belize charged with co-managing seven of Belize's most biologically and topographically diverse protected areas.

Phone: 223-4988
Belize Audubon Society.

VISIT OUR WEBSITE

Short 2 miles from the center of the capital city, Belmopan, lies a tropical oasis, an enchanting get away from the busy streets, the Guanacaste National Park. This 50-acre paradise, aptly named after its iconic Guanacaste trees, boasts a lush secondary tropical forest teeming with a captivating array of birds, plant species, and diverse mammals. Bordering the tranquil riverbank, Guanacaste National Park has become a haven for nature and wildlife enthusiasts, offering hiking trails that lead to mesmerizing encounters with a symphony of birds and the lush vegetation that adorns this natural sanctuary. As if that weren't enticing enough, the park's wooden decks and peaceful picnic areas provide the perfect setting for post-adventure relaxation. Though modest in size, Guanacaste is grand in terms of ecological diversity. Within this small but rich sanctuary, visitors can delight in the chorus of nature that fills the air.

As you wander the well-maintained trails of Guanacaste, you'll be serenaded by the melodious tunes of countless avian species. From the vibrant toucans with their colorful beaks to the resplendent plumage of other feathered residents, this park is a birder's paradise. One of the unique features of Guanacaste National Park is its proximity to the riverbank. This strategic location allows visitors to enjoy moments of serene contemplation by the riverside. The park provides well-crafted wooden decks and picnic areas that invite you to unwind and connect with the soothing flow of the river. Whether you're seeking quiet moments of reflection or a peaceful picnic surrounded by the sounds of nature, Guanacaste delivers a riverside retreat like no other.

