Rio Blanco

National Park

Within the vast expanse of indigenous Maya communal lands, Rio Blanco National Park stands as a natural gem between the villages of Santa Cruz and Santa Elena, in the heart of Belize's western Toledo district, just 30 miles east of Punta Gorda. Spanning across 105 acres of lush secondary broadleaf forest, this sanctuary is a gateway to a world of natural wonders.

The Rio Blanco National Park is a diverse wildlife habitat, serving as a haven for a remarkable array of flora and fauna. Its diverse wildlife habitat provides a safe haven for a wide array of bird species. This makes it a desirable birdwatcher's destination, offering extraordinary opportunities to witness these colorful creatures in their natural habitat. Established as a legally protected area in 1994, the Rio Blanco National Park is now under the joint stewardship of the Rio Blanco Mayan Association and the Forest Department. This dynamic partnership ensures the preservation of the park's pristine environment while also delivering ecotourism benefits to the surrounding communities.

NATURE'S GIFT TO TOLEDO DISTRICT

For adventurous travelers, the park's well-maintained trails await, leading through its dense forest. At its heart lies a magnificent 20-foot waterfall, which gracefully cascades into a pristine pool, a mere 20-minute hike from the visitor center.
